Transitional Processes
A number of new processes have been introduced to support this transition of Indian Act bands into self-government frameworks. These include:

- Rights and Recognition Tables
- “Re-constituted nations”
- Comprehensive Community Plans
- New Fiscal Relationship
  (Financial Capacity Building)

Result: “Reconstituted Nations”
While there are some positive elements in what we know about the Framework, there are significant limitations:

- Reserve based self-governments
- Aggregated regional service delivery
- Limited federal financial obligations
- Restricted access to traditional territories
- Truncated jurisdiction

According to Prime Minister Trudeau, the Rights Framework will be introduced sometime in 2018 and implemented by Fall 2019.

Historic Treaty & Indian Act Bands
The Indigenous Rights and Recognition Framework will transition Indian Act bands into a self-government process.

Indigenous Rights and Recognition Framework
Rights legislation expected in 2018

Indian Act
Self-Determination
As defined by the Federal Government

This information is taken from Part Two of the report, Canada’s Emerging Indigenous Rights Framework: A Critical Analysis, by the Yellowhead Institute.