Manufacturing Free, Prior and Informed Consent: A Brief History of Canada vs. UNDRIP

BY HAYDEN KING

2007

After UNDRIP's introduction to the UN General Assembly, Minister of Aboriginal Affairs Chuck Strahl shared Canada's position: "I am sorry we can't sign on...It's not balanced, in our view, and inconsistent with the Charter."

2010

As New Zealand, Australia, and the United States changed their position on the Declaration, the Harper Government "endorsed" it as well, though with a condition, stating they have "learned from the experience of other countries. We are now confident that Canada can interpret the principles expressed in the Declaration in a manner that is consistent with our Constitution and legal framework."

2014

Despite their "endorsement" Minister of Aboriginal Affairs Bernard Valcourt responded to an article in Nunatsiaq News that "free, prior, and informed consent...could be interpreted in a way that would legally provide a veto to Aboriginal groups, and therefore, cannot be reconciled with current Canadian law."

2015

Campaigning during the federal election, Justin Trudeau remarked_that on pipelines, mining, or industrial forestry in Indigenous territory, "no would absolutely mean no" and promised to implement the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Calls to Action and UNDRIP, both of which emphasize free, prior, and informed consent (FPIC).

2016

NDP MP Romeo Saganash introduced Bill C-262, a Private Member's bill that would commit the federal government to implement UNDRIP. Minister of Natural Resources, Jim Carr, claimed it wasn't necessary because government is working on a "Canadian definition" of the Declaration.

2016

Later that year, Minister of Indigenous and Northern Affairs Carolyn Bennett_announced at the UN that Canada will "fully implement UNDRIP without qualification" through a "section 35 framework.

2018

The Liberals - and a majority of the House of Commons - ultimately support Bill C-262.

2019

The Senate fails to review and pass Saganash's Bill before the deadline. According to Conservative Senator Don Plett, the delay was a result of, "no agreement on whether consent means a veto."

2019

British Columbia becomes the first jurisdiction in Canada to pass UNDRIP legislation. NDP Premier John Horgan remarks, "free, prior, and informed consent is not the end of the world."

2019

NDP MP Sol Mamakwa introduces a Private Member's Bill on UNDRIP Implementation into the Ontario Legislature. It has been delayed at the committee stage since then.

2020

The Government of Northwest Territories establishes an UNDRIP Implementation Working Group and commits to having an implementation plan in place for Summer 2022.

2020

The Federal Government introduces Bill C-15
The United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples Act. While "consent" does not appear in the legislation, federal literature suggests FPIC means "striving to achieve consensus as parties work together in good faith on decisions that impact Indigenous rights and interests. Despite what some have suggested, it is not about having a veto over government decision-making."
